GRASS SEED

Coupled with this intermittence is the relatively high cost of collection and the absence in the main, of anything but rudimentary harvesting equipment thus without the presence of significant demand factors, the creation of an economic commercial industry is some time away.

The Seed Industry of Australia has adopted a code of practice, the broad principles of which we are keen to see reflected in the native seed trade. The adoption of these principles would see seed purchased and sold under known specification and analysis.

Seed Testing details should be requested if relevant to your purposes.

The following species are selected for application to a number of different uses including amenity, mine sites and roadside revegetation and pastoral sowings. Prices can be obtained on application and will be influenced by crop results and quantities required

Native grasses and legumes were well regarded by farmers well into the early half of the twentieth century and are now enjoying a resurgence of community interest particularly as revegetants of mine sites or disturbed areas
